Prof. Dr. Hans Martin Krämer

Institute for Japanese Studies, Center for East Asian Studies, Heidelberg University

Hans Martin Krämer has studied History, Philosophy, and Japanese Studies in Düsseldorf, Bochum, and Tokyo (Sophia University and the University of Tokyo). After obtaining his PhD Degree for a thesis on higher education reforms in mid-twentieth-century Japan, Prof. Krämer spent a year each as guest researcher at Harvard University and the International Research Center for Japanese Studies in Kyoto. He became a professor at Heidelberg University in 2012.

Prof. Krämer's specialization is in modern Japanese History. His publications have mainly dealt with the history of education, religion, and human-animal relations. His recent work has been devoted to clarifying how Japanese Buddhists have contributed to modern understandings of religion both within Japan and abroad.
